

ACCEPT ROOSEVELT PLAN, ARBITRATION OF CAMDEN STRIKE

Decision Culminates A Night of Discussion by The Directors' Board

REOPENS ON THURSDAY

Arbitration Proposal Said To Give Workers 50-50
Break

CAMDEN, N. J., Aug. 27.—Culminating a night of discussion, the Board of Directors of the New York Shipbuilding Corporation early today announced acceptance of President Roosevelt's plan for arbitration of the four months' strike of 4600 workers.

The shipyard will re-open Thursday, a company announcement said, under conditions prevailing when the walk-out was called on May 13th by the Industrial Union of Marine and Shipbuilding Workers. The workers voted almost unanimously at a mass meeting Sunday to return to the plant under the President's peace formula, after union leaders urged them to do so because the arbitration proposal gave the workers a 50-50 break.

The White House plan outlaws discussion of a closed shop, but meets the strikers' demand by virtually compelling the company to recognize the union as the spokesman for the shipyard workers. It also calls for workers being returned to work as fast as possible and without prejudice. All question of piece work, working conditions, pay and other grievances are to be settled by the Arbitration Board already named by the President, within 60 days.

Ending of the walk-out ends a situation that threatened to remove Camden as one of the centers of the shipbuilding industry. Had either side balked on President Roosevelt's peace plan, it was expected the Navy Department would have stepped in with Federal workmen and completed $50,000,000 in naval contracts.

Amateur boxers from Philadelphia had too much experience for the Bristol leather-pushers last night as the Philadelphians grabbed six of the eight bouts against the locals in the St. Ann's outdoor arena. Wood street, before the largest crowd of the season. Three of the victories credited to the visitors were knock-outs.

Three fighters from the Nativity Catholic Club, of West Philadelphia, took away the honors of the show as each scored a victory, one against a Bristolian and the other two in mixed bouts with mittmen from the East Side Club, of Frankford. St. Ann's was credited with two victories while the East Side Boys' Club had the most wins, five, and lost four.

The Saints' gloves were game and gave plenty and took the best of the more experienced boys had. Several times localities had their opponents on the verge of knockouts but the invaders possessed the knowledge of tying up the Bristol boys and then squeezing out of the jams by clinching. The St. Ann's mittmen did too much wide-open fighting and were easy targets for their foes who sensed the openings quickly and slipped over hard blows.

The best bout of the evening was the slugfest between Donato Sciarra, St. Ann's, and Harry DeFazio, East Side. DeFazio was declared the winner of this bout after three rounds of fast milling which was even until the final session. DeFazio was bleeding from the nose from the first round on. He was hit plenty and gave plenty. He possessed a much harder blow than Sciarra. Sciarra scored a knock-down in the first but lost the round when he struck his foe while he was down.

DeFazio opened the milling by solving Sciarra with a hard right. The St. Ann's warrior retaliated with a short jab and followed with two rights. DeFazio was rushed to the corner when he received the worst of the infighting. Coming back to the center of the ring, DeFazio landed a hard right to Sciarra's side but the bootblack swung back and caught the Philadelphian off balance with a right which sent him to the canvas. After the East-Sider was down, the Bristolian continued to swing and was warned by the referee. DeFazio seemed dazed as he rose with his nose bleeding but towards the close of the session rallied and twice sent Sciarra back to the ropes with hard and fast punches to the mid-section.

Sciarra realized that he had lost the first round and came out of his corner like a lion at the beginning of Continued on Page Four

FOREIGN ACES SEEK $20,000 PRIZE IN THE UNITED STATES AIR CLASSIC

"Aero World's Fair" in Cleveland to Be the Year's Most Important Aviation Event in the World

By Leon W. Shloss
(I. N. S. Staff Correspondent)

CLEVELAND, O., Aug. 27.—(INS)—This year, for the first time American pilots will have competition from abroad in the National Air Races, to be held here, August 30-September 2. The foreign competition will be chiefly supplied by the French, holders of more aviation records than any other nation.

Among the renowned Frenchmen who will compete, is the name of Maurice Rossi, who will strive to capture the opening day feature, a Los Angeles-Cleveland derby bearing a $20,000 purse.

Also unique, due to the barring of women contestants last year, is the entrance of Jacqueline Cochran, New York's feminine star, in the same event.

Other entrants in the fifth annual Bendix race will include Cecil Allen, Earl Ortman and Vance Breese, all of Los Angeles; Howard Hughes, millionaire Hollywood and Texas movie and oil man; and Ben Howard Cleveland, Hughes, producer of the movie "Hell's Angels," is flying a ship that cost $150,000.

Women will have another chance to compete with men in the Ruth Chatterton Sportsman Pilot Derby from Los Angeles to Cleveland. The race is open to both men and women. The Hollywood star has put up a purse of $1,000 to the winners in addition to the Ruth Chatterton Trophy.

The National Air Races will be opened formally by Miss Chatterton who will pace her flyers into Cleveland at noon, August 30. The Chatterton race will start August 25 and will be flown with overnight stops at key cities. Notables of Hollywood, including Wallace Beery, Warren Kerry, Ken Maynard, Paul Lukas and Hoot Gibson, are entered in the race.

The National Air Races have become aviation's "World's Fair." Springing up almost overnight just before the Races open, it silently folds and steals away as soon as they are completed. Its population of 10,000 comprises the "thrifty-tourist" and "financially-embarrassed" classes which, by reason of economy or deflated purse, throw up their own community for the duration of the races.

Enterprising entrepreneurs move in, also, each straggling "street" having its commissary, hot-dogs and soft-drink, gas-and-oil vendor, etc. Children play unconcernedly as their parents cook over a wood fire or oil burner, wash out the clothes, and chat merrily with the folks from the tent next door.

In the Cleveland municipal airport, the visitor to the Races see two phases of aviation busily humming away. An imaginary line splits the mile-long, half-mile wide runway down the middle. On the western half commercial aviation is confined during the races, the better to avoid confusion and mishaps involving transport liners and the racing craft. Over on the other side, the Races take place. A grandstand running the full length of the port, ascending in tiers as it converges on the finish line, accommodates 35,000 spectators.

Following qualifying trials in the morning, the "fair" opens at noon with a parade and flight of planes depicting the progress of aviation in the last quarter century. From the laughable, ancient pusher plane, with its propeller in the rear and pilot perched precariously way out in front, to the latest, most powerful transports, some 20 types circle the port.

A short, 50-mile dash for planes of limited power follows. The tiny craft fly a five-mile course around two pylons, one at either extremity of the port.

Now from a Boeing transport half a mile high, more than a dozen 'chutists jump simultaneously. Their goal is the center of a huge, whitewash circle painted on the ground. The most accurate wins the daily prize of $50. Field attendants in motorcycles with side-cars speed to the aid of each landing 'chutist. These aerialists, unique folk speaking prize-ring argot, seldom are injured, but bumps and bruises that would incapacitate the Continued on Page Two Darrah was alone in the car which was a light coach, traveling west on the pike when he failed to negotiate a sharp curve in the road near the plant of the Capital Concrete Block Company.

So far as the authorities have been able to learn there were no eye witnesses to the accident. An investigation is being made by Chief Albert Cooper and Constable Andrew Thompson of Morrisville and Highway Patrolman Reetz of South LaGrange.

Darrah is married and the father of two children. He is employed by the Motor Sales and Service Company, Hanover and Barnes street, Trenton, with which firm he has been connected but a short time in the capacity of salesman.

Faces Momentous Issues

Washington, D. C., Aug. 27.—The 74th Congress, off for a four months' vacation, today faced momentous issues in the next session which opens January 3, 1936.

Inflation, the N. R. A. and the Soldiers' Bonus loomed as among the greatest problems which must be solved by the Congress in the shadow of the impending 1936 election.

The Senate has agreed to consider the $2,000,000,000 Patman Bonus measure early in January. Passage of the bonus in some form seemed assured. Other issues which face the second session are:

1. The Frazier-Lemke $3,000,000,000 Farm Refinance Inflation bill.
2. The N. R. A. Congressional leaders have agreed to make a study of an N. R. A. substitute as asked by President Roosevelt.
3. Silver, Repeal of the Nationalization Act will be pending.
4. Farm Relief.
5. Neutrality.
6. Economy. With a government deficit of billions certain, a Democratic group, aided by Republicans, has served notice governmental economy will be one of the big questions of the next session.

The course of the next session may be somewhat determined by the Supreme Court. Should the High Tribunal declare the Bankhead Cotton A. A. A. T. V. A. and other Roosevelt acts unconstitutional, the next session may continue far into the summer.

SLOVSO HELD IN BAIL TO AWAIT OUTCOME OF WIFE'S INJURIES

Charged With Attempt To Murder His Wife While Visiting Here

CONDITION IS GOOD

Physicians Believe Woman
Will Recover, Unless Complications Develop

The man who yesterday cut his wife's throat while the two were guests of friends here was given a hearing this morning and held in $1,000 bail for a further hearing, September 10th. The hearing was held before Justice of Peace James Guy in the Municipal Court. The defendant gave his name as Pamel Slovso, 625 N. Marshall street, Philadelphia.

A formal charge of assault and battery, aggravated assault and battery and attempt to kill was lodged against Slovso.

The only witness was Linford J. Jones, chief of police. Chief Jones briefly related that Slovso yesterday morning at about 10 o'clock slashed his wife's throat, inflicting two wounds requiring 15 stitches.

Chief Jones reported that physicians at Harriman Hospital had stated that Mrs. Slovso's condition is not serious, unless complications develop.

Slovso was held for a period of two weeks in which time it is thought the condition of his wife will be fully determined.

Slovso and his wife were guests at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Ludwig, 641 New Buckley street. Mrs. Slovso previously resided at the Ludwig home and frequently visited there. She arrived Saturday at noon and her husband unexpectedly arrived Saturday night.

Yesterday morning at about 10 o'clock as Slovso was about to leave the Ludwig home for Philadelphia, he kissed his wife goodbye and then grabbed a bread knife and slashed her throat, according to the police.

Police, yesterday, in going through the personal belongings of Slovso, found an opinion rendered by Court of Common Pleas, No. 1, Philadelphia, and dated October 1, 1925. The opinion stated that after a hearing it had been decided that Pamel Slovso was unable, owing to insanity, to take care of his property and the court named the Franklin Trust Company to act as guardian.

ASK THE MONKEY

And now the spokesmen for the American Medical Association and the New York Academy of Medicine are reported to be taking a poke or two or even more at the California scientist who says he has frozen a monkey, permitted it to remain in that condition for a brief period, and then returned it to life.

Dr. Morris Fishbein, for instance, says the report is too absurd to discuss and yet declares that in a forthcoming issue of the Journal of the American Medical Association he will "discuss the case thoroughly." In view of his first assertion, his announced intent appears likewise to be absurd. However, that is something for Dr. Fishbein to reconcile. Dr. Iago Galdston, executive secretary of the New York Academy of Medicine, appears to believe that the proposed freezing of a human being for an indefinite period and his eventual return to life is against all accumulated medical knowledge.

In an answer to that, some one is bound to suggest that a good deal of knowledge that has been accumulated in the name of medical science appears from time to time not to have been worth the accumulating.

Anyhow, we have a suspicion that if it were not for two things we would not be hearing so much about this freezing for future reference. One is that this is the silly season when people turn their attention to any little amusement to get away from the distress of super-humid atmosphere. The other is that the person who is reported to be prepared to submit himself to the freezing process comes from Hollywood, where publicity, silly or otherwise, is considered more to be desired than mansions in heaven.

THE BURDENED COURTS

Crowded court dockets have come to be the rule rather than the exception. From Maine to California, and from the highest court to the lowest, more offenders are being brought before the bar today than ever before in the history of the nation.

Optimists argue that this wave of lawbreaking is but temporary and that when the pendulum swings back, and they say it must, crowded courts will be but memories. Those who look facts in the face, however, can see little or no relief in sight. The nation is buried beneath an avalanche of laws and ordinances. Criminals are more numerous and more audacious.

One way out of the problem—and it is a serious problem—is to repeal a few obsolete laws and cease prosecuting every trivial breach. The average man, in going about his ordinary affairs, cannot avoid breaking a great many laws. A large percentage of the cases cluttering the courts should not be there. Dreams of a crimeless age are the inspiration of the modern satirists of lawmaking but the fruits seem to be clogged courts and more lawlessness.

But as long as they insist on inventing new laws for the people to break, congress and the state legislatures are morally bound to provide enough judges. Today's conditions violate the fundamental law of the land. Every accused person is entitled to a speedy and public trial, and with court calendars clogged as they are at present a speedy trial is impossible.

Divorce is encouraged by laws of Russia. Over here it's the in-laws, LEWISBURG — (INS) — Work or Officials of this community have hit upon a plan to discourage the hobo by reverting to his inherent enemy—work. officials viewed the profits made by the borough bathing pool in Memorial Park and dispelled previous fear that the pool would create a deficit for the taxpayers.

Citizens were opposed at first to building the pool believing that the town could not support it to the extent of showing a profit. However, it was reported by the park commission that the pool has earned a profit of $243.93 in two months' operation this year, and indications are that the pool probably will earn approximately $2,000 by the end of the season. The earnings are applied to maintenance of the park.

Foreign Aces Seek $20,000 Prize in U. S. Air Classic

Average individual are part of their daily routine. The wind currents play many amusing tricks with them, sometimes sending their 'chute perilously near the watching thousands or over the airport fence into one of the farm fields nearby.

More small-plane races follow and, as shades of evening approach, all eyes turn westward, scanning the horizon for the first arrival in the Bendix Trophy cross-country marathon which started early that same morning from Union Air Terminal, outside Los Angeles, California.

The Bendix Trophy, presented by Vincent Bendix, of South Bend, Ind., is the prize, along with $10,000, which rewards the winner of the first of two feature races incorporated in the National Air Races each year—a marathon from Los Angeles to Cleveland, with contestants privileged to continue to New York in an effort to crack the existing transcontinental record.

It was in the Bendix last year that Capt. Roscoe Turner, popular Casanova of the Cockpits, winged without food through a blinding rainstorm from coast to coast in 10 hours and 2 minutes to shatter his own previous world's record.

Since then, a member, with Clyde Pangborn, of the two-man team which captured third place for Uncle Sam in the London-Melbourne classic, Turner will return to defend his laurels at Cleveland this year.

The Bendix over, the stunt flyers go to work. Here, according to popular acclamation, is the "pay-off" of the races. Words are inadequate to describe the breath-taking antics of these skilled acrobats, but plummeting hearts in the grandstands are a dime a dozen.

For instance, Clem Sohn, of the premier parachute team of Sohn and Wagner, will fly in the "bat-wings" he has constructed for himself since last year's meet. He will dive from 10,000 feet, maneuvering and directing his progress until at 2,000, he pulls the ripcord on his 'chute and floats in gently. This feature will "wow 'em," asserts Cliff Henderson, smiling maestro of the program.

Sohn and Wayne Wagner, the parachute twins from Michigan, stage a "race." Each with a perforated bag of flour strapped to their 'chutes, the pair "bail out" at 10,000 feet. The race is a matter of steel nerve versus steel nerve, with the contestants striving to refrain from pulling the cord until after each other.

As they start, their trail can be traced only by the thin smoke-like line of flour spewing from their backs. Finally, their bodies heave in sight and after what seems like eons—with the announcer screaming "Open that 'chute!" over the public address system, one, then the other, pulls the cord.

At night, there's grand pageantry, lovely and impressive. A nameless young lady jumps from way up in the air in a flaming parachute.

Then they wheel the planes from their hangars across the port for the Thompson, the "Kentucky Derby of the Air," that suicidal 100-mile grind which has seen all but two of its conquerors die within three months of their victories.

This is the first of two articles by Mr. Schloss on the National Air Races.

"CAST INTO EDEN" BY HENRY C. ROWLAND

SYNOPSIS

Jerome Crain, young naval architect, and a wealthy society girl named Linda, are guests aboard the yacht owned by the millionaire, Thomas Tucker, anchored at San Cristobal. Jerome and Linda are bored with one another and when the other guests go ashore, the young couple, each believing the other had gone, stays on board. One of the sailors contracts fever and the yacht is quarantined. No one is allowed to come aboard or leave. Jerome and Linda escape in a skiff, landing on a strange island. Linda wanders off while Jerome repairs the boat. Later, he finds her scantily clad, the clothes she took off to dry missing. Linda and Jerome have the uncomfortable feeling of being followed. Then an eerie cry issues from the jungle. Frightened, they hurry back to the beach in time to see their boat—drifting away and most of his clothes gone, too. Searching for the mysterious person, or persons, responsible for their plight, they come upon a small plantation and a house which has a carefully tended yet vacant lot.

CHAPTER VI

A raucous voice clamored with startling violence, "Well, what in blazes do you want?"

Linda clutched at Jerome. He looked over his shoulder. A huge man with gorilla's plumage was perched on a high branch watching them. It gave a harsh cry and flew away.

"We see it to have struck the retreat for some sort of hermit. But if he doesn't want intruders why should he have set our boat adrift?"

There seemed to be no reasonable answer to this. Even more puzzling, the premonition showed evidence not only of a great deal of work performed originally in the building of the house and laying out of the plantations, but also of an upkeep that required constant labor.

There was no appearance of abandonment. In the tropics the struggle to keep back the encroachment of the jungle is constant so that a few days of neglect would find a clearing overgrown and its plantations choked with rank vegetation.

Yet on the contrary there were none of those evidences of present tenancy that are to be seen about an inhabited dwelling and its immediate surroundings. The place looked as if it had been recently closed off and its accessories gathered up and put away for the brief absence of its occupant. Whoever this might be he would scarcely absent himself for any length of time without leaving a caretaker to keep the chickens in order and feed the deer and whatever other domesticated might still be revealed. Jerome expressed this idea, then as he looked to me as if there might be a native village or quarter or something not so far away as that the people are shy and mischievous and nutty.

"They must be nutty to have set our boat adrift," Linda agreed. "That doesn't make sense."

They walked over to the house. Its walls were solidly built from blocks of lava stone and its peaked roof was thatched with palm. It faced the pool and there was a veranda with a thatched covering sloping down so that its edge was low.

They went in under this and came to a wide front door of heavy mahogany with a big brass knocker. Jerome's rapping brought no response.

"This door came from some old palace, I should say, or monastery, perhaps," he said, and tried the latch. It was unlocked and they went into a living room that was spacious and high ceilinged, cool and dark. It was barely furnished with a few heavy pieces and fine grass mats but no textiles of any sort that might be destroyed by mold or insects.

The interior confirmed the opinion that the premises had been closed within the last few hours and things put away during the absence of the owner.

"But he's not going to be long away," Jerome said.

"Why not?"

"Because he wouldn't leave such things as these indefinitely at the mercy of anybody who happened to land here. Just look at those chests along the wall. Each one is a museum piece. Priceless."

There were four of these chests in the large room. Two were about six feet long by two feet wide and slightly deeper, made from some cabinet wood that had darkened with age. They were richly carved on the top and sides. Three heavy locks secured them and there were great handles of brass at either end. Their state of preservation was excellent and two or three still showed heavy gilding and color.

"Old Spanish chests?" Linda asked.

Jerome leaned over one and examined it. "Yes, but made in Holland, I should say. This one has royal arms. The Duke of Alava's, perhaps. But here's another that's pure Spanish. They're all worth their weight in gold."

"He must have a lot of confidence in his looney caretakers," Linda said.

"I don't believe he's left for very long," Jerome took hold of one of the brass handles and tested the weight of a chest. "Packed full of stuff too."

"Let's hope he's left a few clothes handy. It would be a crime to break into these."

Two rooms opened off the large one. One had a handsome pile desk of marquetry and a couple of prelate's chairs with high backs. Along the walls were mahogany bookshelves with the doors closely fitted but with the keys in the locks.

The other room had a big four-poster bed that was cane bottomed. It had neither mattress, pillows or sheets. There were no closets, but two huge armchairs that were empty. All the windows were screened under heavy wooden jalousie shutters.

"Here's shelter," Jerome said. "But that's all. As there's no kitchen there must be a cook house and store room somewhere."

They went out and round the house. In the rear they found another but smaller stone building with thatched roof behind a thick clump of bamboo. It was about fifteen by twenty and the heavy door of this also was unlocked. It had two rooms that proved to be kitchen and store room, as Jerome had said. The kitchen was bare of everything but a cook stove and the ordinary utensils. But there seemed to be no tableware of any sort nor any cutlery. The store room, however, was well stocked with supplies of the sort that a ship might carry for a long voyage. There were crates and boxes of staples and delicacies, either tinned or in glass.

"This," said Jerome, "is where we eat and drink."

"There was a bin of charcoal in the corner of the kitchen and bamboo splinters for kindling."

A beaten path led from the kitchen to a thick clump of vivid green where there was a clear spring and a deep basin that had been stoned in. The cackling of hens came from nearby.

They set some water to boil and went out to inspect the poultry yard. It was a wire-fenced enclosure with two long chicken houses built of planks and thatched like the other buildings. A number of chickens were straying about, many at liberty outside. Their needs were supplied by a self-feeder that had been recently filled with mixed grain, and a stack of sunflowers was heaped in one corner. And there was a pool that was probably spring fed. Inside the hen houses were rows of nests from which they gathered the eggs.

"None of this checks. Food is all wide open and the clothes are all locked up."

She said irritably, "It's a locked island. Owner and everybody."

"Chests worth a fortune. No telling what's in them. A storeroom full of supplies for anybody that comes along. Yet not so much as an old pair of white duck breeches or a pair of grass slippers; or a hatchet or even a kitchen knife to pare yams."

She said shortly, "It doesn't take a Sherlock Holmes to get the workings of that."

"Well, what are they?"

"Not one thing's been done to protect anything from strangers landing here. But there's been care to put away every little thing that might be carried off by mischievous children or idiots."

"Then what do you deduce from that?"

"What any normal intelligence ought. The owner has reason to believe that nobody dares land, but it has inhabitants who are apt to pick up things left lying round and carry them off."

"Then why not the stores?"

Linda rose, stepped to the door, and took from a hook on the back of it a heavy whip. She tossed it to Jerome. "That looks like a series of lessons to keep out of the kitchen."

"It's a South African shambok—a rhinoceros hide whip. And it's not been hanging here as an ornament. You could cut a Kaffir half in two with the heaviest thing."

"Not quite the thing to use on half-wit children," she said. "No, nor grown up half-wits. It's another line on him though."

"That he's a cruel devil?"

"Yes, Spanish probably. The chests date from the Spanish occupation of the Netherlands. The desk is Dutch marquetry. I've seen painted leather chairs like those in shops in old Spanish colonies; and that shambok is Boer—came from the veldt."

"Some of the Boers were pretty bad when it came to flogging native servants. I've been told... Listen!"

HOLLYWOOD—With the downrightness that has made her father important in the movie world, Katherine DeMille got tired of the type she was playing on the screen and decided to do something about it.

She has just returned from a month's vacation. During that time she changed her face and figure. She has lost 15 pounds and by a new make-up and coiffure looks entirely different from that sultry type she played for "The Crusades".

"I got tired of Katherine DeMille playing shady ladies," she said. "I decided to change my personality and figure so I could wear modern gowns and play modern, sympathetic roles."

First results of her transformation was just such a role with Carole Lombard in "Hands Across the Table". But before she starts on this new Paramount job, Katherine is busy stocking a complete new wardrobe to match her new personality.

Trying to hold on to your help in the show business is a tough task, Hugh O'Connell has discovered. A few weeks ago, Hugh lost his cook, who left his kitchen to follow a radio career in New York. Now he's lost his nurse.

In his last picture, O'Connell injured his back and hired a nurse to help him get about. When Hugh appeared at the studio with her to see about his next role, they asked the nurse to take a test and she quit her job to follow pictures.

Helen Gahagan is singing three hours a day, preparing for her concert tour. Unless studio calls prevent, it, she plans to open the tour in San Francisco in September.

When the troupe of "From Little Acorns" on location in Sonoma, Cal., called on the local C. C. C. boys to help them fake a forest fire, they didn't know the sequel would be so strenuous.

were called out with the troupe to help the C. C. C. fight a real fire.

You Asked Me and I'm Telling You! Dorothy Vasey, San Francisco: There have been numerous successful pictures with unhappy endings. How about "All Quiet on the Western Front"? It cost Universal $1,800,000 and grossed somewhere around $5,000,000.

Helen Broderick, who came out to do "Top Hat" for R-K-O-Radio, seems to be succumbing to the lure. She's bought two saddle horses and a ranch in San Fernando valley.

Forgetting the "hard cash" traditions of northern California, Pringle Productions had to arrange to ship a consignment of hard, round silver dollars up into the mother lode country for the "Thunder Mountain" troupe.

George O'Brien, Barbara Fritchis and Frances Grant found they couldn't spend their money. The old timers, and their descendants, many of them from the days of '49, fought shy of anything but "cart wheel" dollars.
